Street Plan Survey Ready But Council Delays Action

Discussion and action on the Carmel Street Plan was postponed until next week when the preliminary report on the project was handed in to the city council Wednesday night.

The matter was deferred at the suggestion of Mayor Herbert Heron who explained to the council that it would take considerable time to study the plan thoroughly. Members of the council and committee of seven will go over the survey at the coming meeting.

Then on the following week, it is the plan of Mayor Heron to hold a public meeting on the matter and invite everyone interested in the project to join the discussion.

"Every Carmel resident will have an opportunity to express his views on the subject," Mayor Heron said. "We of the council are trying to do the best in the interest of Carmel. If this project does not receive the wholehearted approval of the residents, we are not going to use high pressure methods in forcing it on them."

Mayor Heron's defense of the project came after George Wood, former city councilman charged that the council was attempting to force the matter on the people. He declared that it was not fair to obtain the money for the project by assessments but it should be financed by a bond issue.

Councilman John B. Jordon answered that the council had not yet decided on how the finances would be obtained, or if the present plan would be adopted.

Wood further attacked by claiming that the council was spending more money that was coming in. He said:

"Before another year is over Carmel will be broke. The council is spending money right and left without giving any consideration toward the future. Taxes will have to be raised in Carmel in order to keep up the council's policy."

Members of the council denied Wood's charges and Mayor Heron stressed that instead of raising taxes, they lowered them this year.

Fire Chief Robert Leidig appealed to the council to instruct the police department and residents of Carmel to keep out of the path of the fire truck. He declared that most residents think a fire is a free show and block up the streets so that the fire apparatus and the firemen cannot get near the blazing structure.

Rev. Willis White in a letter read by Councilwoman Clara Kellogg asked the council for permission to have a parade during the annual kite tournament on Washington's birthday. The permission was granted and city officials will join in making the event a success.

The council will consider steps in the future toward the drafting of some type of ordinance to protect the sea life off the Carmel beach. At the present time, sea lions and other sea water life can be killed without limitation.

A letter was also read from the Monterey Society of Architects in which they congratulated the Carmel city council for the proposed Street Plan. The letter was signed by C. S. Ryland, president of the association.

Bacchanal Feast on Street Results in Arrest of Two

Carmel police arrested the first prisoners in several months Tuesday, only to find that death almost cheated their efforts.

Two men, John Bonds and C. R. Gilky, both of Monterey, were taken in custody Tuesday afternoon, when their automobile stuck in the mud.

To celebrate the occasion, the two participated in a jubilant bacchanal fete on the corner of Carpenter and Third streets. All went well for awhile, even several visitors joining the party.

The neighboring householders, disturbed by the singing, called Police Chief Gus Englund who together with Officer Charles Guth took Bonds and Gilky for a walk around the block.

The walk was unsuccessful, for all that Gus and Guth could do, was to keep them standing. Judge Richard Hoagland, attempted to give them a lecture on their disorderly demeanor, but the two fell asleep and the snoring drowned out his honor's talk.

Gus shook them out of their dreamful sleep and then dragged them to the city jail at Monterey, to be left there until further sober moments.

But the sober moments did not last long. A few hours later, the screams of the two men reverberated through the Monterey jail. Aid was summoned and it was found that the mattress in the cell had caught fire and the two were suffocating. The fire was believed to have been caused by a cigar belonging to one of the two.

Wednesday morning, suffering from the effects of the fire and liquor, Bonds and Gilky were brought before Judge Hoagland and pleaded guilty to charges of drunk and disorderly conduct. Each was fined $20.

Washington Birthday Pageant at School

O. W. Bardarson, Principal of Sunset School, announced that the school is attempting a rather unusual observance of Washington's Birthday this year. 1932 marks the two hundredth anniversary of this great day in American history and Sunset School will join in a nationwide observance.

Carmel's celebration will be distinctive, however, in that its chief feature will be an indoor pageant of the five greatest events in the career of Washington. This pageant has been written in its entirety by the pupils of the Seventh and Eighth grades of Sunset School as a part of their regular English class work.

Besides the dramatic action the pageant is interspersed with music of the period and with the delightful costumes of George Washington's time. Dances in the stately steps of the long ago lend action and color to the various scenes.

The pupils of the Seventh and Eighth grades who led in the writing of the dialogue were Jean Spence, Della Lou Fortado and Rosalind Sharpe. Among those having leading parts are Ray Hamilton as George Washington, Marjorie Hastings as his mother, Jean Stewart as Dame Carter, and Gordon Bain as Lord Cornwallis.

Watch For Bumpy Streets! New Racket at Work Here

Carmel's bumpy streets have given birth to a new racket, particularly in one section of the village.

The street there, as the result of recent rains, resembles more a wash board than a road. In one of the houses, three or four youngsters keep a lookout from 9 a.m. until dark, watching for automobiles as they leap over the street.

Invariably each car, either loses part of the engine, the trunk, spare wheel or anything that slips out easily. Only the strongest of automobiles can pass over it and still survive.

Once an article has been dropped from a car, it is picked up by one of the youngsters, while another obtains the license number of the moving vehicle. That night, the owner of the automobile is informed of his loss and is told where he can regain possession if an ample reward is paid.

In nine cases out out of ten, the automobile owner, anxious to get back his engine, or trunk, or spare wheel, or what have you, responds to the telephone call and brings a reward.

Before the rainy season set in, which was directly the cause of putting miniature canyons in some of the local streets, the family in question was in bad financial circumstances and with little food on the pantry.

Now the family, in proud sophistication, goes out for dinner every night!

Carmel Grocery Cupboards Will Occupy New Structure

The completion of the building which M. J. Murphy is constructing on Ocean avenue and Mission street, will bring to maturity the plans of the Carmel Grocery Cupboards, Inc., for the opening of a model grocery store and meat market based on the idea of community co-operation. It comprises special and original equipment and fixtures, a new system of cost accounting that results in uniform pricing and various cost saving features, along with a generous participation by subscribing members in sales proceeds.

The directors of the corporation are local men. Howard Brooks, the president and originator of the plan, has associated with him Robert Parrott as vice-president, Peter Mawdsley as secretary and accountant, and E. Fae Miller, Pacifi Grove Grocer, as treasurer and manager of the store. The entire stock of the corporation is owned by local, resident property owners and taxpayers.

A special feature of the store will be the provision of a light, spacious ladies' room, equipped with an informative library of food values, diets, menus, qualities, prices, research reports, general literature pertaining to food, and many features for personal comfort. The building will be ready for occupancy about April 10th.

Ella Winter Discusses World Disarmament in Address Here

About one hundred and fifty Carmel residents gathered Tuesday night at the Sunset School auditorium in celebration of the opening of the World's Disarmament conference at Geneva, and to hear Ella Winter lead the discussion.

Speaking on disarmament, Miss Winter, otherwise Mrs. Lincoln Steffens, handled the subject with delicate care. The firing of guns is too evident for Miss Winter to urge disarmament without modifications.

During her hour's talk, she touched on the subject of disarmament only a few times. The rest of the time she spent in discussing Russia and world conditions.

She struck at the root of war when she told the audience with some emphasis:

"Before wars can be prevented, before peace can be obtained, we must scientifically find out the cause of conflicts between nations. When the cause is found we must then attempt to cure it. At the present time, I do not think we have found a treatment that cures."

She disclosed two solutions for peace—world disarmament, or the nations armed to the teeth. Both treatments, she explained, have been tried out. As far back as 1913, steps were being taken for world disarmament. Instead, nations were consistently arming themselves, spending billions of dollars to be prepared when the time came for a clash.

She declared that it would be the wiser move if all the nations in the world consented to disarm. But she stressed that such a move was nearly impossible.

"Every great nation has concessions in foreign countries or owns foreign land. In order to protect these concessions, we must have soldiers or marines constantly keeping an eye on them. This eventually breeds trouble. It is my opinion now, and has been, that as a general rule, nations do not want peace."

Miss Winter won applause by a reply to a question from the audience, "What would happen to the innocent women and children living in a foreign country who would not receive protection from their own government?"

Miss Winter flashed back:

"What about the innocent boys, sons of inocent mothers, who are sent out to be slaughtered in order to protect the foreign interests?"

Miss Winter stressed that in general, a government is more anxious to protect concessions in foreign countries than human lives.

"The government is run by capitalism and capitalism owns the foreign concessions. Consequently, it behooves them to keep constant watch and we have marines guarding property in all parts of the world."

The mass meeting Tuesday was sponsored by several of Carmel's civic organizations and was open to the public. The committee in charge of the affair included Mrs. Mrs. Vera Peck Millis, Mrs. Willis White, Miss Ruth Huntington, Miss Rachel Hitler and Miss Hortense Berry.

Warm Up on Figures That Tell No Lies

Rain, snow and cold weather helped conversation along in Carmel this week.

Residents who had talked themselves out on depression and Japanese fighting, started telling each other that Carmel had again suffered the coldest day in the history of the village.

Pioneer citizens shook their heads. Never, they said, had they seen snow so near Carmel—and never, of all things snow on the highway.

Yet Dr. Ferdinand Haasis, of the Carnegie Coastal Laboratory, who interprets the figures for the Pine Cone each week, shook his head.

No—Carmel residents were all wet. This isn't the coldest week in the history of Carmel. Why, the coldest day this week was only 32 degrees, which is just freezing point. Dr. Haasis turned the sheets of his figures back to reveal that some few years ago, the mercury had dropped to 28 degrees.

And as to snow, well, Dr. Haasis, believes that the eye doesn't always tell the truth. Of course, there is snow in the higher altitudes of the mountains—but what falls on the highway and on top of Carmel roofs is not snow. It is frozen sleet.

However, it did rain in Carmel this week, 2.14 inches since last Friday. Which now brings the total seasonal rainfall to 18.95. Oh, yes! Dr. Haasis assured us that it was rain.

Business Group to Meet Next Thursday

A discussion on what the state is planning to do with Point Lobos in the event it should purchase it for a state park will feature the meeting of the Carmel business association to be held next Thursday night.

The merchants will also take up the matter of staging a campaign to urge Carmel residents to shop in the village. The merchants believe that by mutual co-operation, trips over the hill to buy supplies and merchandise can be eliminated. President C. R. Parrott will preside.

Mayor Puts Thumbs Down On Censoring Magazines

Censorship in Carmel? Never! I don't and never will, believe in any kind of censorship."

No matter what Pacific Grove and Monterey does in the matter of banning "suggestive" magazines, Carmel will stand pat and blush if it has to.

And the reason, Pacific Grove and Monterey are looking quite anxiously at Carmel, is obvious. If Carmel refuses to pass such an ordinance as in the Grove, all the peninsula residents will come here to buy their stock of magazines.

Over in the Grove, a censorship board was appointed by the city council there and has already black listed 30 different magazines. Monterey is contemplating a similar ordinance, but is waiting what Carmel does.

Or perhaps, a police guard might be placed on Carmel hill to search the automobiles of all Monterey and Pacific Grove residents for contraband magazines.

At any rate, Carmel will pass through the present situation, with its two cheeks blushing and one eye closed.

It seems that some of the off-color magazines have been brought to school, churches and otherwise, much to the discredit of the literary intelligence of the Grove. Carmel has sold a large number of the magazines, in question but nothing like the Grove.

First against the passage of any ordinance to prohibit magazines or in anyway form any type of censorship in the village is Mayor Herbert Heron.

"Any such a plan as proposed in Pacific Grove is against the usual freedom of Carmel which has made it world famous," Mayor Heron points out. "The moment you try to prohibit something, that very moment you are increasing its popularity.

"The type of magazines they are banning are stupid anyway. There is a craze for them at the present time, but if we leave them alone they'll die a natural death.

Countess Tolstoy Discloses How She Started to Lecture

She sat in a soft, luxurious chair, sipping her warm tea. She looked out through the large window of a Highland's studio and silently admired the rough beauty of the coast.

"Who would have ever thought that in a year's time I would be sitting here among friends, talking with the frankness that in my own country would have meant possibly death," she said, her words carrying a trace of Russian accent.

A year ago, Countess Alexandra Tolstoy, was in Japan, trying to make her living whereever she could. She had fled from Russia on a three months' permit. She had an old dress and $50 in gold.

Once, perhaps twenty years ago, an American woman had come to her home. Out of all the hundreds of visitors, she had remembered her distinctly. Even after all this time, she had never forgotten the name of Jane Addams.

From Japan she wrote to Miss Addams. She wanted to come to America. She wanted to lecture. Would she, Miss Addams, help her? It was risky. It meant lots of red tape had to be cut. But Miss Addams has been cutting red tape all her life. It was all arranged.

Countess Tolstoy arrived in America, but the lecture agent Miss Addams had sought for her, would not have her. The countess had a great reputation—but she couldn't speak English.

"Give me a month," Countess Tolstoy begged.

The lecture agent gave her a month. Eight, sometimes twelve hours a day, she studied English. Fortunately when she was a youngster, she had an English governess and had obtained the necessary pronunciation. In a month's time she had picked up enough English to deliver her lecture.

She started out. Her first two lectures were successful. Then she came to Boston. The audience was two fourths filled with communists. They began to heckle. But Countess Tolstoy was not to fail. She obtained the sympathy of the rest of the audience and when she got through, the applause drowned out the hissing.

Five times, she has been imprisoned, the last time in 1922. All her property, her father's home—even his books were taken away from her. Yet she worked with the Soviet government for twelve years and conducted a large school for them with thousands of youngsters and students.

She said she left Russia because she saw the handwriting on the wall. Yes, she still loves Russia—but she can never go back or has she any such desire.

Plans Being Made to Extend 17-Mile Drive

Construction of several additional miles to the world-famous 17-mile drive through the Pebble Beach area, is contemplated in plans now being made by the Del Monte property company.

The plans call for a connecting link between Asilomar in Pacific Grove and the present 17-mile drive. Del Monte officials feel that by encouraging tourists to enter from the Pacific Grove side, they will get better views of the area. Tourists driving in from this side of the drive, usually have their backs to the best features of the 17-mile scenic section.

You Won't Get Out This Vote And Perhaps That Is Best

Voting will soon be in order. But one Correspondent wont budge from his creaking desk chair. Not that we are not duty conscious. Voting scares us.

We never could put the X in the place where we want to. It always dawns on us ten minutes after we deposit the ballot. Once we ate the ballot and dropped our bag of peanuts in the box.

That is, we did such things in the old days. But now we don't vote. Firstly, because we have heard that there are things called Voting Machines. We don't mean life. Political machines; but we mean just what we said. The kind of machine that one might get physically caught in. One thing we hate is going through machinery, especially the kind that could mark one with innumerable deep-seated X's.

Secondly, we no longer consider ourself of age. Not for hours at a time, nor with such smug ease as we once did. We are such an incurably introvert soul, that the vast workings of government seem to make no spoonholes in our jello

We are a bad citizen, and we pay and pay and pay. Even in school we paid. It took five years of History to pull us through four years of classwork. We drop an alligator tear as we recall the hours we spent after school, on the mouldy inside watching the wholesome football bounce around outside. There started our habit to sit at home, despite fair weather, fair voting, or anything. And every day in every way we are growing debter and debter.

* * *

We are probably a personified anachronism, born two hundred years late. Speed to us is speed. If a big car makes 70 per. with such ease that "you can't feel it," that doesn't pacify us. We know we are making seventy. And we know that if we should meet another missile progressing with comparative velocity toward an opposite point, the idea that one cannot feel it would momentarily, powerfully, be dispelled.

That is why we stop and stare at cars as they come dropping down the Ocean Avenue hill. In our hammered brass chariot we go down in low. This works like a dam. That is, large parades pile up in back of us. Big cars that can't feel speed line up and honk. But not enough to scare us into hurrying up while going down.

Once, long ago, our brake-rod broke, and we unwillingly took the last stretch including seven turns, of the Oregon mountains. That is why we sometimes, now, absentmindedly step on our prematurely long, grey beard, and walk up to our chin.

* * *

In airships we can kid ourself into feeling safe—when we have a parachute. We've never had to use one, so perhaps that's why we feel so safe. You just count to ten by tens and pull a gadget.

Once we worried during a long air ride. The pilot helped us on with a chute. Then he grinned evilly and said, "How feels the sack of cement: comfortable?"

* * *

The Tired Business Man Joke has seen its day—we hope. But we know some about tired authors, artists, and editors that prove truth to be a stranger to fiction, or something.

A certain local artist once did a picture for local publication. A man in the picture nonchalantly displayed six fingers on his right hand. The editor caught that one before it was made into a cut, and the artist took out his pen knife and performed an amputation. Much to the artist's relief, the editor laughed.

"Once when I worked in a newspaper art department," said Ye Ed., "I got canned for putting the big toes on the outside of a handsome Roman gladiator's feet!"

* * *

A local writer of books for children, watched an editor hastily skim through the first part of his MS. The editor marked something with a blue pencil, then wrote in the margin, "Bad Word" or made a mark which meant the same thing.

The author called to the editor's attention that the sentence read, "Oh, Helen, Dan will be here soon!"

* * *

There are enough circulating stories of typographical errors. Therefore we will not tell one on the tired author. Besides, the American language has gone too far from Webster, which leaves the critic open to criticism. We mean that one who is as far back in American slanguage as the mere expression "hooey," should not be too hasty in finding flaws in sentence structure. The flaws might be right.

We admit that we can't keep up. One must be supersocial, and quick at abstractions. The high-school boy can make one understand what we mean. Everyone should be acquainted with at least one school kid. When we make such an old crack as "Gee Whiz," the kid next door gives us such a dazed look that we feel like climbing into a box and nailing ourself in.

It is very hard to explain what we mean. Here is an example. The kid we know bursts into the room, after having seen a collision down the street. What does he say?

A perfectly normal healthy boy, he yells, "Say, did them two Oscars go schilitzer wheney zoomed?"

* * *

Some Early History of Carmel

From "Dawn and the Dons"

By TIREY L. FORD

An extraordinary thing had happened, of which the fatalist may make further note. The San Antonio, when seen off San Diego on March 19, was, in obedience to orders, sailing direct for the port of Monterey, without stopping at San Diego. Near Point Conception, Perez landed to take on water. While thus engaged, the natives, mostly by sign language, gave him to understand that a party of white men had passed there going north, and later, had again passed south. This information was rather perplexing to Perez, for it might mean that the Portola party had returned to San Diego, which, as we know, was what had happened. But Perez was not entirely certain as to the information the natives were trying to give him, and furthermore, his orders were explicit to sail direct to Monterey. He therefore concluded to conform to his sailing instructions, and was just getting under way when he lost an anchor. Feeling that an anchor would be a vital necessity at Monterey, he turned back to San Diego to get one from the San Carlos. Thus to a lost anchor was due the second expedition to Monterey Bay, which resulted in California's retention by Spain and her preservation for our United States.

The arrival of the San Antonio with supplies wrought a marvelous change at San Diego. Despair vanished, and hope revived. Sadness gave way to joy, and the air was filled with a new-born optimism.

Father Serra gave thanks to Almighty God, and began the needed preparations for the momentous journey upon which his heart and mind had been so long and so strongly set. Portola, with his accustomed energy and ability, promptly reorganized his forces, and again set his face toward the north.

It was arranged that Serra, Costanso and Prat should go on with Perez on the San Antonio, and that Crespi and Fages should again make the journey by land with Portola. And so the revived and reorganized expeditionary forces were gotten under way. The San Antonio sailed out of San Diego harbor on April 16, 1770, and Portola began his march the following day, taking substantially the same route as that over which he had twice traveled, and with whose landmarks he had become familiar.

The land party reached Monterey Bay on May 24, thus completing their five hundred mile march in thirty-seven days, slightly less than half the seventy-eight days consumed in the initial march over the same route. Guided by a kindlier fate, they discovered the identifying marks set down by Vizcaino, including the celebrated oak, under which Father Ascension had said Mass, and under whose spreading branches Vizcaino had proclaimed the occupancy of Spain a hundred and fifty years before.

A rather interesting incident occurred shortly after the arrival of the land party. It will be remembered that on the occasion of his first visit, Portola had erected two large crosses, one on Carmel Bay, and one near Point Pinos. These were easily found, and concerning the second one, near Point Pinos, Father Crespi, on the day of their arrival, made the following entry in his daily journal:

"After traveling about three leagues, we arrived at one o'clock at the little salt water lake near Point Pinos, toward the northeast, where in the first journey the second cross had been set up. Before making camp, the Governor, one of the soldiers and myself went on to the cross in order to find out if there was any sign by which we might know that those of the vessel had already arrived. We found the cross surrounded on all sides by arrows, and little branches with many feathered crests, stuck up in the ground, which had been put there by the gentiles." By "gentiles" Father Crespi means the native Indians. "There was also a string of sardines, still somewhat fresh, hanging from a branch by the side of the cross; on another was a piece of meat, and at the foot of the cross there was a little pile of mussels."

This, of course, aroused great curiosity and much speculation, but no explanation was forthcoming until intelligent communication was established with the Indians. Then it was learned that the natives, having observed a red cross on the breast of each of the white visitors, and having seen this large cross, which appeared doubly large to them at night, believed it to be some sacred sign or image, possessing supernatural powers. To propitiate it and gain its friendship, they had placed food beside it; but when they saw the food was left untasted, they made offerings of arrows and feathered crests as a sign of friendship and peace.

The San Antonio, under instructions, had gone on to what was reckoned to be the latitude of the great estuary or inland sea—San Francisco Bay—seen by Portola's party on its former trip. But the vessel did no more than reach the designated latitude when, without doing any exploring, and without even noting the entrance to the estuary, the Golden Gate, she turned back and arrived at the port of Monterey, which, it appears, was more easily found by sea than by land, on May 31, just a week after the arrival of Portola and his party.

Three days later, June 3, 1770, in the shadow of the Vizcaino oak, were enacted the solemn and stately ceremonies that re-established California as a part of Spain's New World Empire.

ON THIS OUR BIRTHDAY

Again the PINE CONE marks a milestone, and with this issue begins its eighteenth year. Born February 3, 1915, when with praiseworthy courage, William L. Overstreet hand-powered a couple of hundred four-page Pine Cones off the press, it has each week gone forth to tell the story of Carmel's doings—or, as Bill Overstreet bannered it, "All the news that's fit to print."

Carmel was small then. Two years later, when it was decided to make the village a city of the sixth class through incorporation, and it was found that this smallest denomination of Californian municipal corporations was required to have a census population of five hundred, there was a temporary halt in the preliminaries. Within the proposed limits were only 499 men, women and children. Extensions north, east or south for any reasonable distance would not add a unit to the census. It was our good laundryman, Pon Sing, who gave the promise of ultimate success, as he stated shyly to the census taker, "Velly soon one more in Pon Sing familee. You waitum one week." With this slight delay, and a Chinese girl baby's name as the five hundredth on the list, the papers that made Carmel a city went in.

It was not until 1918 that Carmel really started to grow. Some say that it took a World War to set us off. Certainly it was during the strenuous days when America was sending its millions of young men to training camps and to France that there began the steady flow of people to Carmel which has continued ever since. In the older parts of town, vacant lots blossomed into houses, and the cross-lot trails and roads were blocked with new residences. People began to find out that Carmel had been plotted as a checkerboard, and its streets ran straight-away, rather than hither and yon, as the contours and trees had made them in the past. Began, way back in the World War days, the cry for curving streets and winding ways.

All this time, the PINE CONE was growing with the town. Enlarging its format, increasing the number of pages, first to eight, then to sixteen, it advanced the town's interests nobly. Overstreet, still its owner, shared in the town's prosperity.

When Carmel incorporated in 1917, it had seemed unwise to include more property within its limits than the partly settled territory. The Point, with only a house or two upon it, was left out; so was Carmel Woods, all vacant, and the Hatton cow pasture, now Hatton Fields. That was a serious mistake in view of the growth that developed so shortly afterwards, but no one then could conceive of the sage, lupine and poppy fields of the Point, home of meadow larks and cottontails, being a mass of fine homes within a few years. If anyone had suggested subdividing Hatton's meadow for residence purposes in 1917, an alienist would have been summoned. So to for Carmel Woods and La Loma Terrace. You might have bought them all for a fraction of the price of three years later. So they were left out of Carmel-by-the-Sea municipality. Of course they should be in. They are as much a part of Carmel, sharing its interests, as Carmel itself, and it is almost impossible to segregate their advantages and responsibilities from those of the corporation. Yet it is difficult to annex them now, and one of the PINE CONE'S aims is to convince the inhabitants of these sections that it is to their best interest to come in.

It was seven years after the PINE CONE'S first issue that the matter of paving the streets became important, and the protracted battle of the pavements started. Down-town Ocean avenue, tired of ruts and ravines, asked for a permanent paving, and was opposed by residents who clung to the old ways. The matter was forced into the courts, and ultimately started the biennial custom of turning out the old council at election, and putting new blood into office. But the street was paved in concrete from Junipero to San Antonio, and long lines of handsome pines on its either side came down to mark the advance of civilization. Another stretch of years and another fierce battle, and upper Ocean avenue and Carpenter street went the concrete way, and another city council bit the dust.

As necessary and far more beautiful is the present Carmel Plan for the improvement of the residential streets of Carmel. It is likely that history will repeat itself, and a fight against it will develop. It may be that a city council will be unseated because of it. Yet this movement to attain the greatest possible amount of artistry in our residential roadways, and make them safe and utile, will do more to advance Carmel's prosperity than did either of the paving programs of the old days. Solidly established as a village of forested lanes, safe for car springs, yet satisfying the esthetic sense, Carmel can be assured of continued progress.

When the PINE CONE opened its first shop in the building on Oceon avenue next to where Don Staniford's drug store is now, eighteen years ago, Carmel had a four room school at San Carlos and Ninth that was barely adequate for the little town it served. As more people with children came in, apologies for the building and its school system were necessary. Private schools flourished, and Carmel felt the handicap of inadequate elementary facilities in its public school.

Today we are proud of our Sunset School in every way. Even the slant slate roof is mellowing to a harmony with its surroundings that silences the early criticisms. As a school plant, little is left to desire, and as an educational institution it can be pointed out with pride. Nowhere in Carmel have the years brought greater advancement than in its school.

When the PINE CONE was a pup, Ocean avenue was kennels, and Dolores street was the run. Nobody could guess that the two blocks on Ocean avenue where one grocer, one drug store, one of this and one of that were housed, would prove inadequate for business in a short time. Nobody could envision rutty Dolores street with fine blocks of concrete structures stretching ever farther to the south. False-fronted cubicles did finely for the few stores that supplied the village needs. And when the postoffice was known to have decided removal to Dolores street, it was felt that the world had gone topsy-turvy.

So Dolores street, after another minor battle, became a concreted street, buildings went up on it, rather better and much newer than its competing Ocean avenue, and there came about a change in style of downtown structures that had much to do with Carmel's future progress. Edward G. Kuster leased the corner of Ocean avenue and Dolores, and placed upon it a shop. That little building, designed and partly built by him, revolutionized our main street. "Cute" was the word most often applied to it, and "cute" are the several successors to it along that

IF THERE BE

If there be the chant of Gypsies
On the autumn air,
Let me have my freedom,
I must wander there.

If there be a sorrow,
Let it from the start,
Grow in bitter-sweetness
Until it breaks my heart.

Let me learn my wisdom
In unexpected place,
Let its beauty be immortal
In my knowing face.

POPPIES

Gray mists, and a morning drenched with dew,
And ambered meadows sloping to the sea;
Poppies with luscious lips held laughingly
Into the air their mistral lord to woo;
Low tide, and a silent, wistful shore,
Strange with the full-eyed mystery of Dawn,
Impassionate, inscrutable, forlorn
Of moral man, — yet of man's soul the core.

Sweet wanton poppies, little earthly lovers,
Brimful of coquetry and childish pride,
Forever pleading and unsatisfied;
O'er you the Spirit of the Ages hovers,
Thrilling your lips with Beauty, for a space;
And then is gone—back to its resting place.

WILL THERE BE LILACS THERE?

When grave-faced Charon poles his shrouded barque
Close to that landing where I stand and stare
I'll ask him just one question: "Charon, hark!
"Will there be lilacs there?"

I gain no joy from promised streets of gold;
I do not care for pearls, like tears entombed;
I'd be a wandering stranger, sad and cold,
Where no bird sang nor any flower bloomed.

I will not fear my narrow stateroom door
Nor grudge the grisly payment of my fare
If, when I reach that farther shore,
There will be lilacs there.

ALWAYS A BIRD

Always a bird,—
And one bird like another—
Always a bird sings in the twilight,
Sings in the dawn;
Always a bird comes back in the springtime,—
One bird or another—
But never returns the true love

street, and on Dolores. That type of shop buildings, could it be made applicable to larger needs, would establish any town as noteworthy. And the little shops did a grand thing for Carmel in pointing the way for its larger and more important structures to follow. No more would a false-front and rectangular box satisfy owner or tenant, but careful thought and artistry must be given the planning of each down-town building, for originality was paid for in the rent and in the business that came in through the doors.

Throughout these significant changes, the PINE CONE was ever present, each week telling the town what was happening in it, and making its comments upon affairs. Overstreet sold to J. A. Easton, and Easton sold to Griffin and Newberry, and Griffin sold his half to Hal Garrott, whose name with the writer's, is still at the mast-head. The paper's stand for a town of distinction and originality is too well known to require more than this mention. In celebrating our birthday, we wish Carmel all the things of hope and promise that a bright future can bring.

People Talked About

They are going to teach the comic strip in the University of California extension division, and Hamilton Wolf, once a Carmel artist and an actor in Forest Theater plays, will instruct the embryo cartoonist in making balloons come from distorted mouths. The University believes that California, famous home of outstanding cartoonists, should be enabled to retain its reputation, and with that idea the first course of its kind ever offered by a university will be inaugurated under the title, "Cartooning and Carricature." Hamilton Wolf, former head of the art department of the University of Washington, started the class last Tuesday night at 540 Powell street, San Francisco.

The comic strip is an American product, according to Wolf, who sees great promise for it in future development.

"One must be an artist before one can hope to be a cartoonist," says Wolf. "Until you understand the structure of the human hand you can not distort it."

Wolf believes that schools that pretend to teach cartooning in a few lessons are worse than a waste of time. "They may teach the student how to copy, but copying is of no value to the cartoonist, and they do not teach him anything about structure or anatomy."

Wolf's instruction will deal with fundamental principles underlying cartooning, with direct application to newspaper and magazine reproduction, it is stated by University officials.

Sinister stories about the tragic background of Carmel are often told in the early morning hours, when even the fire has fallen asleep and needs poking to give out the usual warmth.

There are stories that a large tribe of powerful Indians lived on Point Lobos in the early days, long before Columbus had any idea of borrowing the queen's jewels. This tribe lived happily for many years without any interference from other Indians.

Then, so the legend goes, the chieftain went for an expedition of many months into the mountains far beyond what is know as the Big Sur district. He returned with many gifts among which was a new wife—a girl of sixteen.

The eye of every warrior fell on the girl. Not only was she attractive and young, but she possessed the skill and knowledge that was usually kept secret from the female of the species.

But as the legend goes on, the girl was young and the chieftain old. Eve ate of the forbidden fruit and when the aged chieftain learned about it, his very voice thundered through the sky.

He picked up the Indian girl, carried her to the extreme end of Point Lobos and then with a terrific swing, threw her into the water. Her screams as she fell reverberated through the air.

Then everything grew quite again. Her pretty body, crushed against the rocks, had disappeared. The aged chieftain sat there alone for a long while. Then he returned to his quarters.

That night, according to the legend, there was a terrific storm. The lightning flashed. Then, there was the same scream the Indians had heard that afternoon. They stood paralyzed in fear.

The water from the surf grew higher and a tidal wave covered all of Point Lobos and this section. Not a single man, woman or child of the tribe was alive—except one. The Indian girl's lover.

He had escaped that afternoon—but had not gone far enough not to know what had occured. He ran down the valley into the Big Sur district, telling tribe after tribe what had happened.

And so, the legend concludes, for hundreds of years, Indians remained away from the peninsula—fearing that they would be punished for the chieftain's wrath. To this day, they say, the screams of the Indian girl can be heard on certain stormy nights. Her ghost haunts the Point, in search for her lover.

And then there is the story that Charles Roberts Aldrich, former attorney and now a scientific writer, relates.

Aldrich lived in Carmel in the days when Herbert Heron never knew the village would have to have a mayor and George Sterling was in his prime. Aldrich then lived at Pine Inn, which was the only hotel in town.

Sterling and Aldrich became close friends and so when the poet left for a long vacation, he offered the use of his home to Aldrich. The offer was accepted and one morning in the summer, Aldrich moved his few belongings to Sterling's home which was located in the 80 acres.

Aldrich had anticipated the use of Sterling's home for more than one reason. Sterling had many valuable books and Aldrich was ready to spend long nights in front of the fire reading. The day he moved in, everything went fine.

That night, he put a few logs in the fire place and sat down in a comfortable chair to read. The hour struck ten then eleven o'clock. Aldrich yawned, put his book down and went to sleep.

Suddenly he awoke. His forehead was a mass of perspiration. Something had happened inside that house. He switched the light on, jumped out of bed and went through every corner of the house. He could not find a thing.

But there was no more sleep for Aldrich that night. He sat there reading in front of the fire place until the dawn—then he dozed for a few hours.

When he awoke, his experiences of the night before, appeared like a nightmare. He had probably eaten something that had not agreed. There was nothing wrong with the house—Sterling had never mentioned anything about being disturbed at night.

Nevertheless, when the sun went down, Aldrich tried all the windows to see that they were securely locked. He examined all the doors and he went through every closet and looked under every bed.

He settled down to read and this time he went to bed and fell asleep about ten thirty. But he had hardly been asleep a few minutes when he again awoke with a start.

Something was moving in the house—something queer, something mysterious and sinister. It was moving near him. Aldrich leaped out of bed and switched the lights on.

For a second time he went through the house. But again, he was unable to find a thing.

"I'm a fool," he told himself and with grim determination he went to bed.

But he tossed back and forth until he got out of bed and turned on the light. He put some more wood in the fire, took a book and read until morning when he dozed off.

Thinking that perhaps, he was nervous, or his system was out of order, he went to his old room in Pine Inn and much to his surprise, slept quite soundly.

Aldrich is not a man who gives up a thing easily nor does he believe in spirits and ghosts. So on the fifth night, more determined than ever that he would conquer this sinister enemy that was playing havoc with his sleep, Aldrich went back to Sterling's home.

This time, refreshed with a good night's sleep, he did not retire until midnight. The moment he was in bed he fell sound asleep.

But as on the previous night, he awoke. There WAS something moving in the house. There was no mistake this time. Aldrich reached for a gun he had placed under his pillow and switched on the light.

He rushed into the room where he had heard the strange noise. But there was nothing there—nothing in any part of the house.

The following morning, he packed up his belongings and moved back into Pine Inn. When Sterling returned, Aldrich cornered the poet and related the harrowing nights he had spent in the house.

"Have you ever been bothered like that?" Aldrich asked.

"On occasions," replied the poet. "It's the ghost of someone. I'm used to it now and I always managed to go back to sleep again."

To this day, Aldrich does not know what actually was wrong in the house. Some years later, the home mysteriously burned. Over it's ashes James Hopper constructed a new home where he now resides.

And as to the ghost—it has never bothered any member of the Hopper family. It apparently burned with the house.

The Devil Walks

By Herbert Cerwin

Drama in Carmel this season is suffering from more dangerous effects than mushroom poisoning.

The prospects for legitimate stage plays are none too good or have they been for the past year. Something is apparently fundamentally wrong when one lifts up the curtain and looks back to the early days of Carmel.

One need not go back too far. In 1924, some 24 plays, many of them written by local authors were produced in Carmed. In 1931, when the population had almost doubled and consequently the attendance should have been greater, only eleven plays were given—less than one a month.

Carmel always had a varied number of producers. The names of Arthur Cyril, Herbert Heron, Maurice Browne, John Hilliard, Perry Newberry, Frederick Kuster and Charles Van Riper frequented the list back in 1924. The records of the three theatres then in operation showed that the boxoffice receipts usually paid all the expenses.

What has happened to the drama in Carmel is a three-act mystery which would take a better sleuth than us to solve. May we venture to say that perhaps it is the same thing that has happened to the national administration.

Oddly enough, Lincoln Steffens' home in Sacramento is the executive mansion of the governor of California. The striking home which Steffen's father built and where the family made their residence, is now occupied by Governor Rolph.

In Carmel, there is a certain well known artist who attended college until such time as his presence was no longer desired to hold up the pillars of education. On one occasion, before he was asked to leave, the professor questioned him:

"In the event you were to go out to dinner and the company began to talk about the strange customs of the Andokes Indians and you a Yale man, were asked about them and you did not know, what would you do?"

"Do," the now noted artist hesitated for a minute. "Why I should refuse to associate with people who could talk of such things at dinner."

"Ladies of the Big House" recently produced and which will soon come to the Monterey peninsula theatres, is the work of Ernest Booth, Folsom prisoner.

Booth would have been paroled long before this, but for the peculiarity in his mental make-up, which forces him to continue his life of crime. Even inside prison walls, his active, quick thinking brain is constantly contemplating ways of defeating the law.

But a short time ago ,he thought of an ingenious scheme by which his wife and a former fellow prisoner would change a certain figure on the written court judgment in his own case. Once the figure was changed, Booth would file a writ of habeas corpus, claiming the judgment was faulty and gain his freedom. It was a clever ruse, but it did not work.

More fatal accidents occur in bathtubs than on trains. Government figures show that 45 per cent of all accidents in the United States, happen right in your bathroom.

Soon, there will be formed an organization for "Safety in the Bathroom." We would like the job as president of the association.

* * *

And talking about government figures, it seems everything costs the United States money. There is a special budget for the killing of fleas, another for buying eye glass polish.

In August of 1932, astronomers for the navy will spend $4000 in order to get a good look at an eclipse to occur on that date. Then another budget also reveals that $55 will have to be spent this year for the convention of the African liquor traffic!

The elaborate screening of "The Miracle Man" which was brought to the peninsula by the Peninsula Moving Picture association has come and gone.

The great cast consisted of three cameramen, two technicians, an artist, an assistant director and two "grips." The quotations are from the Monterey Herald on the grips.

Instead of Hobart Bosworth who plays the lead, they sent along a stunt man.

Sending large casts on locations is a thing of the past and only when it is absolutely necessary. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, told us that they can photograph right in southern California practically everything the peninsula could offer—even ginger ale.

More Bridges to Be Built On Coast Highway Soon

Two more bridges will shortly be started on the Carmel-San Simeon highway, one over San Jose creek between Carmel and Point Lobos, the other across Wildcat canyon, just beyond the Highlands. Both these structures are now being planned by the State Highway Commission, and particalar care is being given to have them artistically perfect.

Seventy thousand dollars has been taken from the department's contingency reserve and allotted to the building of these bridges. Bids will be called for as soon as the plans are finished and accepted, and construction is expected to begin within a few months.

Already fine bridges of modern type have been constructed at Garapatos creek, thirteen miles south of Carmel, at a cost of $35,500; at Granite creek, eleven miles south of Carmel, costing $33,700; and one over Bixby creek, eighteen miles south of here, with the longest concrete span in California, is under construction. It will cost $203,334.

Tickle, DeYoe on Grand Jury Duty

Out of the 19 Monterey persons who will serve during 1932 on the grand jury are two well known Carmel residents, Ray DeYoe, local realtor and Edward H. Tickle of Highlands Inn.

DeYoe and Tickle were among a group of 35 county residents from which the 19 now on duty were selected by Superior Judge H. G. Jorgensen. Louis M. Bloss, prominent Salinas merchant will act as foreman of the jury. The jury will meet sometime next week for the first time.

McGrath Home Has Burglars as Guests

Charles McGrath's home in Hatton Fields proved the other night to be a pleasant background for a group of unknown guests who spent the evening there and left before the McGraths returned.

The radio had been turned on, cigarette butts were in the ash trays and even the ice box had been examined and some of its contents consumed. Entrance to the place was made through a rear door, but nothing of value was taken.

New Candidates in Field for Election

Politics in Monterey began to warm up this week with three new candidates throwing their hats in the arena.

John H. Thomsen, Monterey attorney, will seek election as state assemblyman representing the counties of Monterey and San Luis Obispo. Chris Jespersen who now holds the position formerly held by Ray DeYoe of Carmel, will run for state senator in his county.

Mayor J. P. Sandholdt of Monterey who was among the first to announce his intention of running for supervisor will have stiff competition. Supervisor A. A. Caruthers, the incumbent representative of this district will run again. Stanley Ollason, former Carmel valley rancher and now a Monterey resident, has also aspirations to seek the post of supervisor.

No one from Carmel, so far has voiced his intention of running for any of the county or state posts, except E. H. Tickle, of Carmel Highlands who will run against C. C. Baker of Salinas for state senator.

Hatton Fields and the Mesa

"This is the Pine Cone's 17th birthday," said I to Paul Flanders.

"And I suppose the Pine Cone has accomplished a lot in seventeen years—"he responded.

"Only one thing, Paul," I replied. "We've managed to come out once each week for seventeen years—and on a Friday, at that! Some achievement, when you consider what a temperamental little village we live in—"

"Pooh—" said Paul—"that's nothing. Look at all we've done in Hatton Fields in seven years—planted 10,000 trees from fourteen foreign countries and thirty-eight states, built thirty-nine handsome homes on lots ranging in size from ¼ acre to 4 acres. Why, in 1931 alone $121,000.00 went into Hatton Fields and Mesa residences—more than was spent in all of Carmel and the Point, or in Pacific Grove or Monterey—"

"How do you account for it, Paul?" I asked.

"Well, we've got curving residence lanes," he grinned.

"Yes, but they're not colored—" I objected.

"There's more to it than that," said Paul, thoughtfully.

"You're not trying to sell any lots up there, are you?" I asked, in surprise.

Paul hesitated. I thought it was from reluctance to part with his choice holdings, but he was only taking breath.

"92% of the lots in the section north of Ocean are sold, but there are many desirable pieces in the south end and in the Mesa, where you get a view of Point Lobos, the mountains, forests and Carmel Valley. Here is where the Forest Reserve has cooperated in helping us to plant so many trees from all parts of the globe, because they consider it one of the most beautiful spots in the state of California—"

"Whoa, Paul!" I cried, "that sounds like advertising—"

But he went right on, without paying the slightest attention. "You know why so many fine homes are going up there? It's because the location is high, above the summer fogs, healthy, sunny, roomy, restricted as to type of residence, number of buildings to the acre or plot, it can never be anything but a region of beautiful homes set in expansive grounds—"

"Whoa!" I cried again, more emphatically, and to switch the obvious sales talk, asked: "Will there be any homes built in Hatton Fields and the Mesa in 1932?"

"Will there!" Paul almost shouted. "Say—if plans already projected materialize—there'll be more than in 1931, and more than are built anywhere else on the Peninsula—"

"Why?" I asked—but did not wait for an answer.

The Village News Reel

A very delightful wedding and one of unusual interest in many Carmel circles was that of Nora Nichols and Raymond L. Grabill last Monday morning at 10 o'clock at the Del Monte Chapel. The couple are now motoring through California but will return in a few weeks and will make their future home here.

Mr. Grabil has been a member of this community for years, but has divided his time between Carmel and Sunnyvale. Mrs. Grabill has been here a comparatively short time but has already made a host of friends. Her daughter is Amelie Vaughedes-Waldo of Seaside..

Complimenting Mrs. J. B. McCarthy and her mother, Mrs. Charles Voitus, a number of friends gathered last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Wm. Heathorne and spent a pleasant afternoon with cards and conversation. The guests were: Mrs. J. B. McCarthy, Mrs. Charles Voitus Helen Ware Burt, Margaret Boyle, Margaret Chamberlain, Mrs. Harry Stephens, Mrs. Wm. Heathorne, Daisy Bostick and Mrs. Albert T. Hyde.

¶

A delightful luncheon was given last Tuesday by Mrs. A. T. Hyde in honor of Mr. Hyde's two sisters, Mrs. Roy Purviance and Mrs. H. D. Lewis of Pennsylvania. Other guests were Mrs. Thomas Clemens of Carmel Highlands, Mrs. Baker of New York City, Mrs. Vera Koch, Mrs. Lottie Cunningham, Mrs. Chas. Berkey, Mrs. Guy Koepp and Mrs. Frank Sheridan. Mrs. Hyde is planning a series of parties for her sisters, with a tea in the very near future.

¶

After spending several weeks in her house on the point Mrs. Josephine Rand-Rogers has returned to her home in Palo Alto. Mr and Mrs. H. E. Rothschild will occupy the house on the Point.

Aged Carmel Indian Dies at County Hospital

Panuchi, 104-year-old Carmel Indian, said to be the last of the tribe that roamed over this section when it was primitive wilderness, was removed Wednesday to the county hospital at Salinas, where he died in the night.

Word of the condition of Panuchi, who lived in a tent in Tortilla Flats, was brought to Chief of Police Gus Englund who sent Dr. John Gray to examine him, who ordered him to be taken at once to the county hospital.

American Singer Coming

Rose Florence, the mezzo-contralto who is singing in the Denny Watrous Gallery on Saturday, February 13, is distinguished for the grace and charm of her interpretations. The San Francisco Chronicle said, "Her interpretations are vitalized by a personal vividness that has charm and grace."

Undoubtedly it is this rare quality which will delight Mme. Florence's audience, when she sings songs of Handel, Schumann, Moussorgsky, Wolff, Griffes, Ravel, Roussel and others. Elizabeth Alexander will accompany.

Christian Science Churches

"Spirit" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon Sunday, February 7, in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

The citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon will include the following from the Bible: "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24).

The Lesson-Sermon also will include the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "We worship spiritually, only as we cease to worship materially. Spiritual devoutness is the soul of Christianity. Worshipping through the medium of matter is paganism . . . 'The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, " (p. 140).

Cougar Hunting in California Shown at Carmel Theatre

Bearing the endorsement of the leading women's clubs, picture reviewing organizations, leading educators and even the unqualified endorsement of James Rolph, Jr., Governor of the State of California, Sidney Snow's motion picture of California natural life, "Cougar," will open its one day engagement at the Carmel theatre tomorrow afternoon.

The picture at its few public screenings and private reviews has been hailed as even greater than those epic pictures, "Hunting Big Game in Africa" and "The Great White North," which were produced by the same intrepid explorer and naturalist, Sidney A. Snow, who with the cooperation of Mr. Jay Bruce, official state lion hunter, is responsible for this wonderful new picture. From the standpoint of the Californian, "Cougar" is even more interesting than either of its two predecessors in the fact that not one single scene was photographed outside the boundary lines of this state and, furthermore, the producers absolutely guarantee that not one single scene was made in a motion picture studio.

While the lion hunting expeditions over which Bruce as state lion hunter presided furnish most of the thrills in the picture, there are still many things caught in the camera's eyes that will thrill and delight the spectator, and to quote the Governor in a recent letter addressed to Mr. Jay Bruce, "The picturization, combined with your intrepid courage and tireless efforts should thrill the heart of every red blooded man, woman and child who has the good fortune to view the picture. As Governor of the State of California, I feel honored in endorsing and recommending this picture."

The above endorsement, according to Snow and local theatre executives, is but one of many hundreds that have been given in behalf of the film.

To the Women of Carmel

Your grocer and butcher are not getting rich! They have plenty to do to keep their help employed and break even. The field is already overcrowded. COMPETITION HERE AND ELSEWHERE ON THE PENINSULA HAS CUT PRICES TO THE BONE. Independent Carmel grocers and butchers are successfully meeting this competition.

In spite of this fact, two new groceries and markets (one of them a chain) plan to open in the village. They will not reduce prices. They can only spend money hoping to eliminate some of us.

We and many of our employes are Carmel home owners, tax payers, supporters of wellfare and civic activities. We, your neighbors and fellow-townsmen request your continued patronage only so long as our prices are as low, our service as prompt and efficient as the newcomers.

In the end both you and Carmel will gain more by patronizing locally owned, independent stores, than by encouraging non-resident chain store owners to take money out of the village to spend in distant cities. If this chain store movement gains control in the village, Carmel's individuality will be lost, and with it much of its attractiveness to visitors and tourists. Carmel will become just another standardized American town controlled by absentee owners.

(This ad is paid for by independent Carmel grocers and butchers)
